

Title:

Gender as a Social Control

Student; Faculty:

Michelle Moses; Dr. Underwood

Abstract

This study argues that gender is a social invented meant to enforce social control. The argument discusses gender as a social construction, and why it would serve the purpose as social control. Additionally, the premises discusses are how gender would employ social control, including such topics as gender roles, gender exploitation, socialization, and social ostracism. To complete the argument, there are also objections that are analyzed, including gender as inherent, gender as human nature, etc. The paper is in the final writing stages, and still in review, with additions to be made.